

THE NEW YORKER

No. 25 WEST 43RD STREET
NEW YORK, 36, N. Y.

EDITORIAL OFFICES

OXFORD 5-1414

February 24, 1959

Dear Dr. Lederberg:

I am trying to put together for this magazine an eventual piece on CETEX, with most of my research to be done following next month's meeting at the Hague. One of the things I am anxious to get is your thoughts on the whole general subject as suggested by Richard Porter, Lloyd Berkner and others in the East. Since half a continent separates us at the moment, the most practical way I can think to start is to be allowed to have a copy of the December 1958, and February 1959, letters and other material that you sent to NAS, addressed, I think, to Bronk. I can get copies of these, if you grant permission, from Attwood or Frutkin at NSA. Of course, I would also prize copies of any other correspondence you might have put out, as well as, it goes without saying, anything you might care to write to me personally.

My research should be pretty well along by April. If at any time during that month you are going to be within three or four hundred miles of here (and have the time and inclination) I would be glad to wait on you in order to hear in detail anything you might care to discuss with me on this subject.

Sincerely yours,

Eugene Kinkead

Dr. Joshua Lederberg
Chairman
Department of Medical Genetics
University of Wisconsin
Madison, Wisconsin

EK:ab